Jnents, in order to increase their utility; wishing, as he said, that his wife, the empress, might also contribute to the welfare of his subjects. The empress accordingly gathered the silkworms from the trees, and, with the women attached to her household, endeavored to tend them with much care in the imperial apartments, to supply them abundantly with mulberry leaves, and to keep them very clean. It was soon discovered that they thrived more in rooms than in the open air, where they were constantly exposed to their natural enemies, serpents and spiders, and to the ill effects of changes of temperature; all which were obviated by subjecting them to domestic care. The cocoons gathered in the open air, and in the rooms, were also very different; the latter being not only more numerous, but of a better quality, and richer in silk. Care was afterwards taken that the eggs were hatched within the rooms; and there were thus two kinds of silk culture; the natural and the artificial; the superiority of the latter becoming gradually more and more manifest. 6. Similar exertions for the domestic culture, were made by the succeeding empresses, among whom the consort of the Augustus of China, Yao, principally distinguished herself. That art became thus the principal occupation of the empresses, and several apartments of the imperial palace were given up to it. From the highest rank of females, it came to be exercised by the whole fair sex, and...
